PREFATORY NOTE

In 1903 the Library of Congress published an eight page "Select list of references on Federal control of commerce and corporations." This was expanded to twenty-two pages the next year, and in 1907 it was found necessary to publish a supplement, under the title "List of more recent references on Federal control." Considerable material on the Interstate commerce law was also included in the second edition of the "List of books on railroads in their relation to the government and the public," issued the same year.

This new edition is made up of references selected from the earlier lists and from the material published during the past five years. So great is the mass of literature on the subject that even after a selection was made it was considered best to issue the list in two sections, the one here offered containing the references of a general character on Interstate commerce, the Constitutional question, the Interstate commerce commission, the Sherman anti-trust act, etc. (see Table of contents). The other section, now in active preparation, will consist of references to material dealing with special applications of the principle of Federal control, including, for example, such questions as the control of express companies, telegraph and telephone business, Federal incorporation and taxation and special applications of the Sherman anti-trust act.

"The author's conclusion is that the power of the government of the United States to regulate corporations and commerce is ample and that it should be exercised fully in accordance with Gladstone's plan of "working the institutions of the country,"—i. e., by putting into effective operation the existing machinery of the government. The author aims to show that activity in investigation and prosecution by executive departments and administrative commissions, coöperation therewith and support thereof by the legislative, and confident resort to the courts by individuals and public officers for the protection of rights under statutes, the common law, and the Constitution, will result in the regulation of corporations and commerce to the satisfaction of commercial and financial interests and of the public, but that unconstitutional legislation and the attempt of the executive and legislative to reduce the efficiency of the courts and to prevent resort to them will delay the solution of present problems and aggravate them in the future."

Harvard law review, Jan. 1906, v. 19: 168-199.

Argues that the "power to regulate freights and fares for interstate transport" does not belong to the states, as decided by the Supreme court in Wabash railroad co. v. Illinois in 1886. "The states, being thus deprived of the power to regulate interstate rates, the doctrine has now become current that the Constitution gave this power to Congress." This proposition is examined in the light of precedent and constitutional interpretation with the conclusion that Congress has no control in the matter. So that the Constitution does not permit interference either by the states or Congress.

 "The public nature of the services rendered by railways has long been recognised, and supplies the basis for arguments in favour of railway nationalisation. Mr. Haines, however, is no believer in the alleged benefits of state ownership. On the contrary, he holds that all, and more than all, the benefits derivable from state ownership can be obtained under a system depending on private enterprise combined with efficient state control."—Econ. jour., Sept. 1908, v. 18: 437.

- 338 ——— Restrictive railway legislation.
New York, London, The Macmillan company, 1905. ix, 355 p. 20½ cm.
 Substance of a course of lectures delivered at the Boston university school of law. Traces beginnings of railroad history, discusses railroad corporations, finance, construction, operation, traffic, rate-making, regulation of rates, state railroad commissions, pending legislation affecting interstate commerce, state control of corporations engaged in public service, and devotes a chapter to general conclusions.
 The author believes in private ownership under government supervision, the Interstate commerce commission to be furnished with power to fix rates in specific cases coming before it, but not with general rate-making powers.

 Urges federal control.
 "A recent compilation shows that, of 316 freight rate cases decided by the Interstate commerce commission, fifty-four per cent—practically one half—turned in favor of the complainant. . . .
 Were the orders of the Commission to become effective at once,
 the losses incident to errors afterward corrected by the courts would be distributed in about equal proportions. At present all the penalty of a mistake falls upon the shipper and the public; the railway always goes scot free. (An impartial Commission should be clothed with power to distribute these onerous burdens by prescribing the temporary rate.)"

Reported by G. W. McCrary.
Reports a bill which "asserts the right and duty of Congress to regulate inter-state commerce, as carried on by railroads, and prescribes as one of the regulations thereof that the charges of persons engaged in such commerce for carrying freight and passengers shall, in all cases, be fair and reasonable." The question involved is then discussed constitutionally and as to expediency. Concludes that "any attempt to regulate this commerce, which stops short of a prohibition of extortionate rates, must become altogether ineffectual as a remedy for existing evils."

Reviewed, by Charles E. Grinnell, in American law review, Jan.-Feb. 1907, v. 41: 1-26.
"This work will fill a general demand of the profession for a comprehensive and reliable work covering its subject. It deals with the subject from a broader standpoint than that of the Interstate commerce act alone. The authors consider the common law rules, the state statutory regulations, the Interstate commerce act, the decisions of the Interstate commerce commission, and the decisions of the state and federal courts. The present general demand for such a work is due to the Interstate act amendments of 1906, the age of all works on the subject, except those of Snyder and Judson, and the fact that they fail to deal with the common law and state statutes, which are at the very foundation of this subject."—Harvard law review, Feb., 1907, v. 20: 340.

"This book deals only with freight rates."—Pref.

The writer argues that the railroads should favor conservative legislation. In a chapter on "federal regulation" he discusses effective legislation and proposes: First. That a special court should be created in accordance with the constitutional provisions concerning the federal judiciary. Complaints made by persons aggrieved—or in their behalf by a public official or board—that specific railroad rates upon interstate traffic are unreasonable and unjust should be presented to this court. After speedy notice to the carrier the court should summarily inquire into the reasonableness of the rate complained of. If found reasonable, the complaint should be dismissed; if found unreasonable, the court should enjoin its further collection. This would end the function of the court. Second. In case a rate were found unreasonable, that all the papers in the case, together with the evidence, should be certified to the Interstate commerce commission, which should be empowered, upon an inspection of the papers, then to make a maximum rate to take the place of that found unreasonable by the court. The rate prescribed should remain in force a prescribed time, but should be subject to modification by the Commission. No hearing before the commission would be necessary or expedient. Speedy action would be possible and should be required.

Argument for extension of the powers of the Interstate commerce commission to the regulation of rates in case of complaint. "It can hardly be doubted that the Commission from its construction, from the watchful position which it occupies, and from its varied experiences in a large class of cases, is better prepared than the railroads, themselves interested and zealous parties to the strife, to lay down the true lines of reconciliation between carriers and shippers in the complicated and far reaching problems which arise between them."

Holds that it is the part of wisdom for the railroads to concede legislative and executive control of rates, and that if the railroads successfully oppose the legislation urged by the President, the country will resort to government ownership. Through government ownership $600,000,000 annually will be saved to the people, and to this form of ownership "no possible constitutional or legal objection can be stated."
